

- Bacterial rectal colonization should not be used in guiding empiric treatment for neonatal sepsis
- Concordance in bacterial genus and species in simultaneously taken blood and rectal isolates from neonates with suspected sepsis was low
- The negative predictive value of detecting Gram Negative isolates in rectal samples compared to those in blood samples was 81.6%