FORM OF FIX: TRANSATLANTIC SONORITY IN THE MINORITY

Lisa Mansell

Cardiff, Wales

May 2007
For 25 centuries Western knowledge has tried to look upon the world. It has failed to understand that the world is not for beholding. It is for hearing [...]. Now we must learn to judge a society by its noise.

SUMMARY OF “CRITICAL INTRODUCTION TO FORM OF FIX: TRANSATLANTIC SONORITY IN THE MINORITY”

The “Critical Introduction” is a concise formal essay that contextualizes and supplements the critical and philosophical ideas presented in my dissertation. It provides a critical backdrop to the work and re-traces my critical role models, literary ancestors, the points of identification from which my writing emerges. It also serves as a critical component towards the submission of the dissertation for a PhD in Critical and Creative writing, although the main body of the dissertation itself is a meta-critical blended space of both discourses.

SUMMARY OF “FORM OF FIX: TRANSATLANTIC SONORITY IN THE MINORITY”

Form of fix: Transatlantic Sonority in the Minority is a creative-critical text that explores White-Welsh and African-American cultural identities as plural and fragmented sequences of interpellation through sonic and visual schemas of signification. This sonic|scopic double-interpellation accommodates a conflicting dual-identification with the empirical self and with the dominant oppressor. This shifting and blending of role-models leads to a fracture of canon, loss and reapportionment of ancestor, and allows parallels between traditionally disparate cultures to cross boundaries of race, space and rigid hierarchies of minority/dominant. This dissertation interrogates and surveys extremes of textual production to reflect this depolarization of binaries motivated by canon-fracture: from Shakespeare to Slave-Song, Mabinogi to Nathaniel Mackey.

CRITICAL INTRODUCTION

TEXTUAL ORALITY: ORIGINS AND MYTHOLOGY

From classical epic to primitive folk-ballad; from pre-literate, mystical other-speaker to national laureate spokesman: the phrase "oral tradition" stimulates a myriad of canons in Western textual ideology— all generalized un-specifically under this term. These different traditions of vocalized textual expression register dovetails of influence, overlaps of memory— transitory records of cultural identities. While Western postmodern conditions acknowledge a fragmentation of identities, "oral traditions" are far too often generalized into the category of other— territory of the minority. Orality remains a form of textual expression that is antipodal to written, preservative discourses of scholarship: institutions of logos that value a very classical reason, transparency and truth. In an academic culture centered on the fulcrum of Aristotelian mimesis, oral texts become submerged into a place of marginality— a product of the minority.

A subdominant orality, an instable movement of mythos, becomes homogenized by a synonymously valueless position in post-enlightenment economies of logic. Because literature emerges as an enriching participant in the wider repertoire of critical thought, often demonstrating ideologies of its contemporaneous critical movement, and critical writing engages with literature in this dialogue of thoughtful expression, critical and creative writing should share a blended space of intelligent expression. But traditional academic discourse, which I regard as being linguistically transparent, sign-based and visual, fails to sufficiently accommodate un-visual materiality, extra-semantics (supposing that traditional mimesis represents a centre). Oral traditions evolve un-scrutinized, in secret and separate from the logocentric gaze of a more typographized ideology. A bipartite distribution of hierarchy emerges where oral texts are refused status as vehicles of critical thought. Oral traditions remain, pre-literate, pre-historic, and foreign to Western textual ideology, and their colliding and complex overlaps of narrative, and broken linearity, are overlooked by dominant discourse in an act of deeply ingrained cultural polarization of ocular dominance versus an imposed oral skeuomorphic echo of pre-typographical documentation. It is only from the perspective of written discourse that orality fails to document history, identity, and a sense of a sophisticated tool for critical thought.

But oral texts, rather than enforcing a new way of critical reading and a re-prioritization of signification methods, are dismissed as lowly aesthetic attempts by the primitive or the other. Not fitting the dominant critical model of discourse renders the oral text voiceless. A blindness to ocular and oral blends fails to conceptualize notions of crossing-over role-models, canon-fracture, and multiple points of identification in the oral text, and especially in the sonic text—a text that while being written maintains an acute oral and verbal awareness, much like the text of this dissertation). This dissertation purposefully surveys texts that belong to dominant and minority identities, the clash of in-between, canon and whispered undulating alternatives, from Shakespeare to slave-song, in an attempt to depolarize the neat, bipartite faux-hierarchies insisted upon by both current and prior critical movements, by the ghost of Western uber-criticism: my strange-familiar ancestor.

TWO SONIC INTERPELLATIONS

Among these prior critical movements, Russian Formalism through Shlovskian verbal-art, a textual 'art for art's sake', and a deliberate and critical disregard for the textual periphery of history, identity, author/reader and Futurism through Eichenbaum and Mayakovsky's aktualisace ('foregrounding') emerge as strange role models of my own. Bringing into the foreground what normally resides in the background is what initially motivated my analysis sonic narrative as a prominent vehicle of expression. The sonic text is a specific designation that locates the important interaction between the oral and the ocular, voice/breath and type, sonic and scopic, and defines texts where the au/oral contingent of meaning is strongly prioritized and foregrounded, or integrally equal to the scopic at the level of compositional production.
But the sonic text did not erupt from history as a consequence of relatively recent Russian Formalist and Futurist ideologies. The sonic text, far from being a modern phenomenon, is just a small part of a long tradition, and one notably minority in origin. Placing a critical value on factors such as ‘tradition’ and ‘minority’ is indeed an unusual maneuver from a critic so influenced by Shlovskian Formalism which isolates textuality from emotion and history. But in the same way that it is unhelpful to create false polarities and an either-or philosophy so inherent to an insufficient dominant critical discourse, it is equally mythological to ‘choose’ one ideology and stick to it, to universalize a school of theory as being capable of explaining every textual possibility. While Russian Formalism and Futurism are role-models that underpin some of my critical approach, context, emotion (nostalgia), history and identity (albeit mythologized) are equally engaging critical concepts to me—my familiar ancestor.

Sonic foregrounding manifests through important forms and procedures in Old Welsh poetry. Cynghannedd is a strict procedural metrical alliteration that serves not only as mnemonic practice, but as creative process, genesis, and not unusually to the detriment of utilitarian verisimilitude. This dissertation challenges a notion of sound text as being a purely modern construction, interrogates the historical absence of sonority as a concept outside the role of ornamentation and mnemonics in literary theory, the invisibility of the oral when reading canonical texts, and questions the uneasy reception of the sound-text as a piece of critical-creative writing.
The term for this very specific conceptual sonority, and the first type of sonic interpellation I want to introduce, is "sonic narrative". It is a type of narrative because it is a structural force that allows text to move from beginning to end, and that narrates images that arbitrarily develop from sonic procedures and patterns, a reversal and foregrounding of the traditional maxim that supposes that narrative is nothing more than a chronological container for story, and that any sonority is extra-semantic, incidental and arbitrary. The concept of a sonic narrative is influenced by musical narratology, a combination of harmonic progression, the relationship between key and modulation that approximates a journey of tensions, and interpellation of register that becomes physically internalized and sub vocalized. The tonic key of a work becomes established as home, as familiar, and modulations away from the tonic key are acts of defamiliarization. In conventional Western bitonality narrative becomes resolved by a return to the tonic key, and the anticipation of return suspends tension forming a textual kinesis. Sounds, in the case of music, pitch and timbre are subvocalized and interpellated, a process that Wayne Booth describes in For the Love of it: Amateuring and its Rivals:

More to the point, why the cello-path rather than dozens of other musical and non-musical possibilities?

Could it be that my choice began with my enjoying, in adolescence, the new macho power yielded by the bass line— I often called it, incorrectly, the basso profundo line— in hymns and barber shop quartets? ¹

Linguistic textual material differs dramatically from a musical material in its comparatively monotonic palette. Where music offers possibilities that are beyond our physical capacity and invites an interpellation into these impossible positions, language usually offers to an audience sounds that are within our gamete of vocalization. This places the audience in close proximity to the sonic material and a profoundly powerful subvocalization occurs:

You scratch out on a surface words you imagine yourself saying aloud in some realizable oral setting. Only very gradually does writing become composition in writing, a kind of discourse— poetic or otherwise— that is put together without a feeling that the one writing is actually speaking aloud (as early writers may well have done in composing). ²

Instead of audible vocalization as a by-product of reading and writing, the process becomes submerged, subvocal. The body is mutely articulating linguistic utterance but inhabiting the same muscular tensions, breathing, but augmented, exasperated, by the interruption of notation, the agency of rhetoric, and the dynamics of typographical marks. While natural free-speaking, free-writing can demonstrate subvocalization, utterance can be manipulated to force subvocalization into unanticipated if not impossible positions and further intensify the ocular and oral collisions of text. Sonic narrative is the consequence of agency. But subvocalization of this kind is universal and psychodynamic, according to Ong. What does this have to do with memory and minority if the majority seem to engage equally in this process?

The relationship between sonority and minority identity can be measured by the value designated by the dominant Western critical thinking to the sonic text. Dominant systems of textual expression value the visual. A canon of textual production emerges from Aristotle to the present that places an ideological value on clarity, wholeness, truth, transparency. These texts are visual because they disregard semantics of utterance and privilege the sign/signified image of language. To indulge in the sonic text is to choose to be deviant, to be other—retaliatory, alternative, and to refuse to conform to dominant paradigms— to be minor. But minority is seldom a choice. While dissatisfaction with the dominant textual ideology and role-model might encourage a tenancy towards alternative, sub-dominant methods of textual expression, individual sonic interpellation can be extended and contribute to a secondary cultural sonic interpellation.
BLACK MINORITY AND SONORITY: INVISIBILITY, ANCESTOR AND ROLE-MODEL

The musical Negro is one of Western textual ideology's most persuasive mythologies. Textual orality tends to migrate from the primitive to the minority as a mutually exclusive exchange of inferiors related by generalization in the economy of textual hierarchy. African-American textuality was consequently disregarded as a vehicle of critical intelligence, reflecting the social segregation of the pre-civil-righteous West. But the relationship between Blackness and orality is more complicated than a reflection of the social binary of dominant and minority.

The silent text is a product of proto-modern European fashion. While language as transparent utility has roots in the development of writing, silent reading is well regarded as a relatively modern phenomenon. Cultural identities are established and fortified through scopic retrospect to role-model and canon. Constructions of identity identify similarity relatively visually in a scopocentric culture that stipulates that we are who we look like. This preference for the visual is metaphorized textually in the disappearance of sound in White-western texts. But to designate African-American writing and textual ideology as a polar opposite of the dominant would be an horrifically superficial observation. The interaction between the ocular and oral in the production of the sonic text (or either Black or White origin) is a complex space of blended role-models, mythologies and multiple registers of interpellation.
While it is both untruthful and unhelpful to quantify Blackness with the sonic and Whiteness with the scopic it is also important to fully interrogate this maxim. Motives for this mythology might emerge in a synonymy between oral traditions and African textual production as a means of cultural and historical preservation. The familiar comfort of the Western-textual-visual is inverted in a culture where verbal transmission is valued more than writing. Meaning through sound is a far more significant process to textual and cultural survival. But this is also relevant to pre-scribal European textual production. More significant is the prohibition of literacy in slave communities, prescribed by the oppressor, as a catalyst to a new oral tradition, sophisticated, rhythmic, and uniquely signifying a proto-African-American community. The minority, despite a forced occupation of the sonic, begin to interpellate identity as being deviant to the dominant role-model presented by the oppressor. They are not their ancestors.

Ancestry is an important West African concept that provokes a non-linear dialogue with the past, memory and cultural identity. This dialogue often manifests as verbal exchange, and sometimes the dynamic demonstrates complex and virtuosic sonic interpellations:

6/29/2007

1 This ventriloquism of ancestral voices is further explored in more detail in Chapter 4 "Mackey, Mythology and Mabinogi" where parallels between this African tradition and a similar manifestation of spirit voices in the Mabinogi demonstrate sonic interpellation in Welsh cultural identity.
Dream too is a school of ancestors, one of altered states in which the dead re-appear, one of such states that we in these pages pursue. (The Aranda word for dream also means ancestor.) Among the Dogon, elders get drunk on millet beer, into which the souls of the disgruntled dead have crept. These are the dead who have not yet been properly laid to rest by their surviving kin, those for whom the required rites have not yet been performed. [...] They get into the beer, under whose influence the elders accost the community with insults and accusations, openly muttering abuse along the streets. 3

Nathaniel Mackey describes a ventriloquism of dead ancestral voices speaking through living mouths. Ancestors are a source or origin and their vocalization metaphorically represents an ur-speech that is shared by their descendants, a shared voice that travels transgenerationally, and reinforces a collective cultural sonic interpellation. Music is also entwined in the process of a sonic consciousness between ancestor and descendant, not only through musical (in addition to rhythmical, and physical through dance) associations with ritual in ancestor worship, but in the cultural hum that pulses extra semantically through a culture that conceptualizes knowledge through voice, we-sound. Jodi Braxton demonstrates that this ancestor-hum persists in contemporary African-American ontology in "Conversion" through the phrase 'blues ancestor':
The critical importance of ancestor as a preserver of cultural memory and identity, as a role-model, distant spokesperson in African ideology shifts as new African-American identities develop. Multiple points of identification emerge from a cultural identity constructed of blended traditions, mythologized history, and gap. The new minority identifies simultaneously with an unempirically negotiated and mythologized origin and with the identity of the oppressor into which many are born but do not belong either. This dual-identification leads to a mixture in role-models, a blend of oral and ocular ways of experiencing themselves, and a fracture of canon.
Invisible Man materializes from this collision and blending of role-models and ancestors, a double-interpellation of self as minority, and simultaneous identification with the oppressor, and Ellison articulates a relationship between visual and sonic as being more elaborate and complex than the superficial binary antithesis emphasized through prior critical movements. Throughout, the text synaesthesically qualifies the visual in terms of sonic, not as polarized conflicts. More specifically, Invisible Man addresses the links between a visual lack and a discrepancy of musical rhythm:

> Invisibility, let me explain, gives one a different sense of time, > you’re never quite of the beat... That’s what you hear in Louis’ music.

It becomes clear that identity is more-than and fuller-than what conventional schemas of the scopic and sonic can allow. Syncopation and invisibility metaphorically rebel against notions of visibility and traditionally perfect (metrical) rhythm, and this text does not designate sonority to the minor and visibility to the dominant. Rather, influences are developed from both spheres of role-model, ancestor, through a discourse that fits and unfits both the typically linear story-narrative novel and the vernacular, social avant-garde colliding tongue of civil rights literature.
Invisibility dominates the novel thematically, and it is the concept of cultural invisibility that motivates the pursuit of alternatives, and a mistrust of the visual as a means of representing identity echoes Franz Fanon's "racial epidermal schema". Fanon, like Ellison, avoids a tendency epitomized by dominant contemporaneous critical writing, especially New Criticism, to oversimplify identity into whole polar binaries:

...at various points, the corporeal schema crumbled, its place taken by a racial epidermal schema. In the train it was no longer a question of being aware of my body in the third person but in a triple person. In the train I was given not one but two, three places. I had already stopped being amused. It was not that I was finding febrile coordinates in the world. I existed triply: I occupied space. I moved toward the other ... and the evanescent other, hostile but not opaque, transparent, not there, disappeared. Nausea. ...6

An epiphany of plural identity is negotiated through a triplicate identification that interrogates the traditional binary of self vs. other, sight vs. sound. Space and physicality (nausea) are introduced as alternative concepts for representing not identity, but identities. This spatial-physical negotiation fragments the dominance of ocular schemas.
Ellison’s novel also demonstrates a fragmentation of visual schemas to allow alternative sensory interpellations to manifest. On multiple occasions the text omits visual imagery, relegating ocular identification as secondary to sonic schemas. This process of auralization is supported by innovative language-manipulation, “hearing the thin, tissue-paper-against-the-teeth-of-a-comb whistle following me outside at the next stop”. Occasions of linguistic virtuosity alter the passive utility of breath to a gasp of phonetic materialization, often Joycean and vernacular:

I’m a seventh son of a seventh son bawn with a caul over both eyes and sired on black cat bones high John the conqueror and greasy greens—.

Language forms opaque arabesques of indeterminacy that encourage a reading out-loud of heavy breath-altering compounding—a shift from the subvocal to a(n) (ex)plosive thud of utterance. Exhale— an externalization of language links the sonic and physical as alternatives to supposedly unequivocal/visual schemas for identity representations.

But these deviant ventures into linguistic materiality are only explored very occasionally during the novel, which rests dominantly conforming to familiar utilitarian modes of language as a speech-notation-music. While the text is conceptually boundary-breaking, linguistic innovation is only marginally developed in this demonstration of dual-identification with dominant logocentric Westernism to convey inventive identity.
concepts emerging from a subdominant and sonic perspective. What emerges is invisibility as visual-lack in a discourse that is consequently conceptually sonic, and this marks only the beginning of a challenge to the prior uncontested supremacy of institutionalized and utilitarian discourse by texts that erupt from the subdominant other. Cognitive sonority as a means of cultural interpellation is further developed by Nathaniel Mackey in Discrepant Engagement:

What I mean to suggest is that there are bass notes bottoming the work of these various writers — writers who, poet or novelist, black or white, from the United States or from the Caribbean, produce work of a refractory, oppositional sort — one hears the rumblings of some such "place" of insubordination.... Marginality might be another name for that place. 9

This extra-semantic bass-note, a duende-like hum is an auditory interpellation and eruption of communal selves. It is so un-specifiable in the context of traditional three-dimensional discourse based on the sign because it is an expression of sonic consciousness manifested textually through evasions of visual discourse, like Ellison's invisibility, Fanon’s negotiation of physical and spatial schemas. But I suggest that procedures based on phonetic patterning creative a sonic narrative that can begin to accommodate the overflow of more-than erupting identity. Linguistic experimentation consequently occurs more often in text of minority origins and supports the idea of a bottoming bass-note in constructing a collective sonic identity.

Mackey uses musical terminology to describe these sonic positions of minor since conventional textuality does not accommodate nomenclature for alternative non-visual discourses. But African-American sonic identities are often identified most strongly through two musical genres: the jazz song and the Negro Spiritual. Many minority communities are regarded (by dominant typographical culture) as being exponents of various song-based forms of expression, and these minority communities are often denied access to visual significations and forced into sometimes false associations with jazz, folk and spiritual signing instead. This identity is fabricated by cultural oppression and is representational of a minority that it subjugates. This subdominant other is free to inhabit au/oral modes of expression because it excludes minorities from the dominant critical logos of typographical ideology. To assign jazz and slave-songs as exclusive representatives of Blackness in the 18th to 20th centuries is to ignore the process of mythologization imposed on subdominant cultures by the dominant. But this material remains the most culturally available and popularized texts that express a flip-side of centre, luxurious linguistic signatures for identities that are deeply sonic.
Attention to exact vernacular notation bends the mimetic flex of signification from utility to sonority in numerous spirituals and jazz-songs alike; a nonconformist language allows a layer of opacity to manifest and interrupts a notion of language as transparent, clean functionality. Arresting rifts of convoluted grammatical mutation supply deviance and accommodate the rhythmic constraints of music, of breath, of elaborate phonetic patterning colliding with familiar visual semantics. A new English emerges, not a sub-English that flips ideologically from truthful transparency to utterance, and guttural materiality. Deviant grammar and syntax establish a virtuosic cadenza of sonic complexity that suggests a particular instinct for extra-semantic meaning derived from sound. This creative process is supportive of a cultural ideology that preserves, signifies and represents identity through the non-visual, that chooses to develop textual progression through sonic narrative as an alternative to the critical dominant that fails to accommodate a shifting and blending ripple in identities of the minority.

A WHITE-WELSH INVISIBILITY: RETRO-DIASPORA, AND MEMORY

Through communities of blended identity, mixed role-models, and adopted ancestors it is possible to cross (multi)racial and geographical boundaries; a shattering of cultural stasis opens influences from new directions, from role-models that do not directly belong to that same cultural canon and milieu. From a personal perspective, why would a White-Welsh writer identify more closely with the seemingly unrelated role-model of African-American writing than a home-grown mother-tongue-textual ancestor? The answer might be that a supposed mother-tongue ancestor has been obliterated through layers of mythologized Welsh identity imposed by the external and English ideology of empire: a Welsh identity lost in an act of Imperial retro-diaspora. Welsh people have maintained relative geographical stability throughout their history, quite unlike the significant physical diaspora experienced by a large proportion of West African people through forced relocation to the Americas and the Caribbean. But successive movements of cultural and linguistic obliteration have left a gap of trauma, of language-loss, of social amnesia and forgotten history of Wales. The White-Welsh too have lost ancestors in the whitewash of Imperial homogenization.

The Welsh 19th century is volatile and unfixed by quick and dramatic processes of deconstruction and mythologized reconstruction. Perhaps the most destructive of these obliterations was the 1847 Inquiry into the State of Education in Wales (commonly referred to as The Blue Books). The inquiry represents the Welsh as an under privileged, poor and inarticulate society who can benefit from English intervention. The process of linguistic genocide begins soon after this publication with the invention of the “Welsh Not”. It was a block of wood inscribed with the words “Welsh-Not” hung around the neck of a child caught speaking Welsh at school. The unfortunate child marked with the “Not” at the end of the school day was corporally punished, and children were rewarded for speaking English, for informing their teachers when their peers were heard speaking Welsh. The invention of the "Not" is accompanied by its own folk-lore-like aura—officially, its existence has always been contested. Amid the erupting wobble of changing identity incited by a decline in rural communities, a population dispersal into heavily multi-cultural centres of industry, and the waning grasp of welsh as a viable, utilitarian language, multiple points of new identification emerge.

In 1874 the Fiske Jubilee singers arrive for a concert-tour in Swansea, South Wales, and their Negro Spirituals become adopted as quasi-anthems alongside traditional Welsh hymns. The Negro Spiritual retains an important position in Welsh male-voice choral repertoire today. This extraordinary mutual interpellation through music of two seemingly disparate cultures marks the beginning of blended minority identities collecting more under the heading of other than under pocketed distinctions of race. Both cultures have lost ancestors, experienced language-loss and exist amid mythologized fabrications of history invented by an external and dominant oppressor. The popularity of the Fiske singers in Wales is underrepresented and now almost forgotten as Welsh cultural identity, demolished in part by The Blue Books, is rebuilt according to an English view of history— revival.

Wales experiences a cultural revival during the 19th Century motivated by a Pre-Raphaelite and Romantic Nationalism ideologically and fashionably sweeping British aesthetics and criticism. Early Medieval Welsh texts were translated for a new English speaking audience. Of these, the translation of the Mabinogi [Mabinogion] by Charlotte Guest (1849) has become the best known document of ancient Welsh identity. For an increasingly Anglicized Wales this text transmits a lost history of national self, Arthurian, Romantic and fixed, that fills the lack created by the English dismantling of Welsh identity. The Mabinogion represent a textual epitome of oral tradition, a transmission of verbal and trans-generational and preserved Welsh identity—an identity that is oral. A surge of supposedly ancient Celtic practices support this revival. The reinstitution of the Eisteddfod demonstrates a disoriented and Romanticized regurgitation of 12th century Welsh reality under the masque of custom, history, identity anchored upon another popular oral idea: bardism.

The composition of the Welsh National Anthem, "Hen Wlad Fy Nhadau" (1856) is contemporaneous to this revival movement. It is still considered a potent symbol of Welshness, sung vociferously on almost any occasion ranging from sporting events to political assemblies (often accompanied by a refusal to sing the British counterpart, "God Save the Queen"). The anthem's lyric supports the idea of National sonic interpellation:

2 The Eisteddfod is a synod of bards that allegedly dates to 1176. Modern Eisteddfodau consist of literary and musical competitions. Though the etymology is contested, a modern Welsh speaker can decipher two words that form this construction: Eistedd (to sit) and bod (to have been). A literal translation "to have been seated" is supported in the custom of awarding winners of the competitions a throne-like chair in the modern Eisteddfod. It is unclear whether this is a later addition introduced through an additional process of mythologization based on false etymologies. Additionally, 'bard' is a word of Welsh etymology: 'bardd' which means either poet or bard.
The text integrates the two concepts of ancestry, “Land of my Fathers” and sonic consciousness, “A land of bards” to negotiate identity in terms of sonic role-models. Wales has adopted the subtitle ‘land of song’ firmly by the time of the text’s composition. But this lyric only demonstrates the mythologized and utilitarian sonority implemented externally by the dominant as a means of denying Welsh voices a position of critical significance by inhabiting more logocentric discourses in parallel with the subordination of African-Americans into genres of Jazz-song and Spiritual. This anthem, like many Spirituals, only echoes sonority as a way of interpellation identity and mimics an Anglo-mythologized hand-me-down ideology of faux-sonority. Conspicuously absent from this text, and numerous other revival-texts including the Mabinogion, is the use of particular sonic narrative through phonetic patterning, or through music-notation-speech vernaculars. Revival-texts are lip-service subsonic schemas that operate without deviance to utilitarian visual. This is alarmingly in contest with the supposition that Welsh is a melodious language and exponent of complex phonetic verse-form procedures called cynghannedd.

Cynghannedd [harmony] is a rhythmical patterning of phonetic material that characterizes Welsh poetry—from Old Welsh to modern:

dawn yr iwrch | rhag y niadr oedd
[ d n r (rch) | (rh g) n dr (dd)].

This an example of cynghannedd camosod [misplaced] from a 16th century text, and its phonemes are patterned chiasmically. Some flexibility is allowed in the interchangeability of allophonic pairs such as dd/d and ch/g – phonemes that share the same origin of utterance in the same part of the mouth or throat. Numerous literary traditions champion their own forms and procedures as signifiers for a cultural ideology: the metrical alliteration of Old English poetry, kenningar of Old Norse sagas, meter and rhyme in modern European prosody. What makes cynghannedd different is that priority designated to sonic narrative above conventional visual mimesis. The pattern of sounds motivates the creative process sometimes to the detriment of utilitarian meaning:

One can make out pretty surely that the Welsh refused to write intelligible poetry. ... The difficulty is something like that of the Icelandic court poetry. But the Icelander always has a clear idea: he knows the fact before he starts coating it with professional epithets. In Old Welsh poetry, there is apparently vagueness of thought as well as ingenuity of words to get over.\textsuperscript{12}

It seems that a preference for expression and representation through linguistic sound rather than visual textual signification appears even in Old Welsh texts. These texts are only ‘unintelligible’ when read through Westernized dogma. The disregard in these texts for verisimilitude also suggests that phonetic patterning is not employed for mnemonic preservation—what is there in terms of conventional narrative to preserve in these works? The relationship between memory, identity and the sonic text must be subjected to double scrutiny to address this question. What a sonic narrative does preserve is an ideological trace of a cultural identity that interpellates sonically and rejects visual arbitrary signs as forms of accurate or important representation. What motivates this ideological position of visual lack and its repositioning of sonic consciousness in the first place?

As aforementioned, Ellison’s \textit{Invisible Man} and Fanon’s ‘racial epidermal schema’ suggest an economy of visual meaning that fails to accommodate blackness as anything more than a generalized and collective subdominant, which leads to an inadequacy of scopic schemas alone to interpellate plural and shifting subject positions and identities. A double problematic emerges in the White-Welsh absence of a visual epidermal signifier of other. This epidermal black manifests another type of invisibility—the transparency of looking identical to the oppressive purveyors of the dominant and insufficient ideology. But the White-Welsh sound different, speak different, and speech-notate-music differently, and this is exploited as a signifier of difference.

The Welsh language, often regarded unspeakable by non-Welsh speakers, demonstrates an ideological prioritization to utterance as opposed to notation as utilitarian, still-life record of ideas. Welsh acknowledges that the phonemic construction of words are not static and fluctuate depending on their relation to other sounds. This is demonstrated most explicitly in a grammatical phenomenon called mutation. For example, ‘cr’ [dog] and ‘cath’ [cat], when flanking the conjunction ‘a’ [and], would be uttered ‘ci a chath’. Aspiration is notated in the mutation of ‘c’ of ‘cath’ to ‘ch’. Allophonic variations occur in most languages, but seldom few notate utterance as elaborately as Welsh—a record of moving, shifting language. The beginning of language-loss during the 19th century displaces the importance of utterance to a representation of the Welsh sonic consciousness through inhabiting false positions of bards and singers invented by Anglo-mythology. And the White-Welsh do not explicitly oppose their identical dominant, but identify doubly with it. Like dual-identification in African-American identities, neither the sonic nor visual alone accommodate multiple and shifting identities—it is the delight of scopic|sonic collision, the rippling gaps and rifts that shard, collapse, construct and utter a more-than just visual self.
CHAPTER SUMMARIES

Chapter 1: “Shakespeares and Explosions” | “Some-might-say sonnets” challenges the sonnet’s dominant position as a sonic text and negotiates it as double construction of textual sonority, material language that positions phonetic extra-semantic signification into the centre as a co-dominant, and in some cases dominant, to traditionally visual sign-based meaning systems. Other explicitly procedural texts, most especially Raymond Roussel, enter the dialogue to demonstrate this shift in the scopic-sonic balance of schemas. Shakespeare’s sonnets are also included as representative of the sonic|scopic text, as blended space of utilitarian logos and elaborate sonic narratives based on phonetic procedure. Shakespeare’s ‘bardism’ is also explored as a signifier of the oral, and as an appropriation of Anglo-mythologized Welsh identity that reiterates the theme of shifting role models and strange ancestors in minority writing.

Chapter 2: “From Bardism to Minstrelsy: A History Ternary Thirsty” engages a dialogue between White-Welsh and African-American constructions of identity as being interpellated sonically in opposition to the dominant visual discourse of logocentrism. In this chapter documents that represent links and similarities between African-American and White-Welsh identities are juxtaposed, and blended into a meta-critical discourse that contextualizes textual, historical and critical motivations, explanations, and demonstrations of these relationships.
Chapter 3: “Neither-Both and Boom” develops the idea of physicality as a manifestation and co-product of phonetic utterance in the sonic text drawing on Olsonian notions of kinesis, with a particular interrogation of the term projective to be a projection of utterance and simultaneously a projection of image. False mythologies are also explored though the myth of the kenning – an impostor ancestor in Old Welsh literature—which becomes a metaphor for the collision of binary in textual production. Cognitive binary collision enters the discussion through an analysis of metaphor, and typographical collision and blending is thematically explored by the hyphen. Hélène Cixous manifests as a representative of textual-cognitive collision and blending in establishing a critical-creative textual space, and demonstrates the problematicized nature of binary through the introduction of triplicate hyphenated constructions.

Chapter 4: “Mackey, Mythology, and Mabinogi” specifically develops themes of mythologized history and lost ancestor though a dialogue between Nathaniel Mackey’s Song of the Andoumboulou, and the Mabinogion. The oral tradition as a purely sonic text is challenged, and the act of textual notation of cultural voice re-addressed as co-inhabitants of sonic history, visual mythology, and physical transcription. The theme of the creative-critical text manifesting from a dual-identification with empirical and oppressive other re-enters the dialogue—this time to challenge the polar critical vs. creative binaries enforced by dominant logocentric criticism onto works that fit neither-both category.

The poem is not a stream of consciousness, but an area of composition in which I work with whatever comes into it. Only words come into it. Sounds and ideas. The tone leading of vowels, the various percussions of consonants. The play of numbers and stresses and syllables. In which meaning and ideas, themes and things seen, arise. So there is not only the melody of sounds but of images. Rimes, the reiteration of formations in design, even puns, lead into complexities of the field. 13

England endangered the bardic tradition in a new way, as English poets tried to impersonate the bardic voice and to imitate bardic materials, without grasping their historical and cultural significance. For nationalist antiquaries, the bard is a mouthpiece for a whole society, articulating its values, chronicling its history, and mourning the inconsolable tragedy of its collapse. English poets, in contrast, imagine the bard (and the minstrel after him) as an inspired, isolated, and peripatetic figure. Nationalist antiquaries read bardic poetry for its content and its historical information; their analyses help crystallize a new nationalist model for literary history. The English poets are primarily interested in the bard himself, for he represents poetry as a dislocated art, standing apart from and transcending its particular time and place.¹⁴

Content never equals meaning. If the artifice is foregrounded, there's a tendency to say that there is no content or meaning, as if the poem were a formal or decorative exercise concerned only with representing its own mechanisms. But even when a poem is read as a formal exercise, the dynamics & contours of its formal proceedings may suggest, for example, a metonymic model for imagining experience. For this reason, consideration of the formal dynamics of a poem does not necessarily disregard its content; indeed it is an obvious starting point insofar as it can initiate a multilevel reading. But no complete the process such as formal apprehensions need to move to a synthesis beyond technical cataloguing, toward the experimental phenomenon that is made by the virtue of the work's techniques. Such a synthesis is almost impossible apart from the tautological repetition of a poem, since all the formal dynamics cannot begin to be charted: think only of the undercurrent of anagrammatical transformation, the semantic contribution of the visual representation of the text, the particular association evoked by the phonetic configurations. These features are related to the "nonsemantic" effects that Forrest-Thompson describes as contributing towards the "total-image-complex" of the poem (but what might be better called its total meaning complex).15

I chose two almost identical words (reminiscent of metagrams). For example, billard [billiard table] and pillard [plunderer]. To these I added similar words capable of two different meanings, thus obtaining two almost identical phrases.

In the case of billard and pillard the two phrases I obtained were:

1. Les lettres du blanc sur les bandes du vieux billard ...
   [the white letters on the cushions of the old billiard table].
2. Les lettres bu blanc sur les bandes bu vieux pillard ...
   [The white man's letters on the hordes of the old plunderers].

The story begins with the first and ends with the latter. It was from the resolution of this problem that I derived all of my material. 16

What's wrong with this line?

dawn yr iwrch rhag y neidr oedd

Deconstruct it:

dawn yr /IWrch| rhag y neidr /OEId
  d n r: (rch) | (rh g) n dr: (dd)
This is a cynghanedd draws at a glance; antiphony includes the consonants d-n-r, and overlooks the rh and g. On further inspection, we realise that the order of antiphony is different: dmr/ndr. Despite their being the same consonants, they have been misplaced, and that is the name of the fault in this line: misplacement.

This was the original form -- a line from Tudur Aled (16th C) describing a lively march like a small deer jumping at the sight of a serpent in its path: [it is not clear whether she meant the original form of cynhanedd, or the orginal form in Aled's work]

These are the two errors [another error is mentioned earlier in the chapter, but I have not included this excerpt] that easily trick the ear, and one must [taper] train the ear in order to become familiar with these [errors] and avoid them.19

The two sets of rhymes forming the pattern of the first quatrain are closer to each other than we might expect with an abab pattern, because all four lines end with the same consonant ('bed', 'tired', 'expired'). The word ending of the first line of the following quatrain ('abide'), though introductory, the new rhyme that begins the cdcd pattern also ends with a 'd', and in addition contains the long 'i' of 'expired', which ended the last line of the first quatrain. [...] Not until the sixth line does Shakespeare deviate from this repetition, when he introduces 'thee'.

FROM BARDISM TO MINSTERLSY
{A HISTORY-TERNARY THIRSTY}
Sad near the willowy Thames we stood,
And curs'd the inhospitable flood;
Tears such as patients weep, 'gan flow,
The silent eloquence of wood,
When Cambria rushed into our mind,

And pity with just vengeance joined;
Vengeance to injured Cambria due,
And pity, O ye bards, to you.
Silent, neglected, and unstrung,
Our harps upon the willow hung.25

Southern trees bear strange fruit,
Blood on the leaves and blood at the root,
Black bodies swinging in the southern breeze,
Strange fruit hanging from the poplar trees.

Pastoral scene of the gallant south,
The bulging eyes and the twisted mouth,
Scent of magnolias, sweet and fresh,
Then the sudden smell of burning flesh.

Here is fruit for the crows to pluck,
For the rain to gather, for the wind to suck,
For the sun to rot, for the trees to drop,
Here is a strange and bitter crop.26

Nor is my invisibility exactly a matter of a biochemical accident to my epidermis. That invisibility to which I refer occurs because of a peculiar disposition of the eyes of those with whom I come in contact. A matter of the construction of their inner eyes, those eyes with which they look through their physical eyes upon reality.²⁸

How do sounds speak to memory? I have bought you out of the land of Egypt and I have broken your bonds. Not true in music where mind is chained to the vehicle of moving sound. Certain writers hear with their eyes are concerned in their poems and prose with irregularities and dissipations with monsters of mutation. Dracula exists for Van Helsing as a continuum of changing forms. Here he is a façade of language walking on stilts half-mouthed and mincing as the French / with the open mouth or as / in the English system of pronunciation.

My Irish friends and relations still do imitations of our American accents. [...] Our voices are the shrillest part— the way we pronounce ps, Amuurrca, paarrrrk, waaaturrr. Those long nasal as; Baaas-st-n, haarr-br. The horribly dropped s in Yea to form a sort of neighing 'Yea. I can underline letters and use bold and itals for emphasis, but a person cannot be in two places at once, such marks are only acted charades.36

Although mutations seem completely unnatural to English speakers, there is a bit of logic behind some of them. For instance, when some American speakers think they are saying "in Colorado", what they're actually saying sounds more like "ingkolorado". In the Welsh phrase "yng Ngholorado" the mutation from "C" to "Ngh" simply approximates the spoken phrase.

By "paraphrasing" the Israelites as bards, Evans synecdochically replaces the collective subjects of the biblical Psalm (their sense of group identity shaped by an experience of shared diaspora) with a much smaller cultural elite of distinctly aristocratic sensibilities and loyalties, trained to serve as the living repository of cultural traditions.40

This is why an immemorial trait is found among Welsh preachers known as the Hwyl. If a stranger to the Welsh Hwyl were to go to a rural Welsh church and hear their preacher half-way through his sermon he would be surprised to hear a spiritual which is like a Negro spiritual as two peas.

We have too, a growing evil, in the practice of singing in our places of public and society worship, merry airs, adapted from old songs, to hymns of our composing: often miserable as poetry, senseless as matter, and most frequently composed and first sung by the illiterate blacks of the society. [...] Mr. Wesley, who has solemnly expressed his opinion in his book of hymns, [...] actually expelled three ministers (Maxwell, Bell and Owen . . . ) for singing "poor, bald, flat, disjointed hymns: and like the people in Wales, singing the same verse over and over with all of their might 30 or 40 times, 'to the utter discredit of all sober christianity'.

[In Wales] towards the end of the century competition was fierce between "Real Negro" troupes and local troupes in blackface. Real Negroes adapted some of the successful attributes of the local [Welsh] innovators by exaggeration and satire, or put another way, by subverting the local take on minstrelsy... i.e. blacks parodying whites parodying blacks. 43

What then agentlike brought about that tragoady thundersday this municipal sin business? Our cubehouse still rocks as earwittness to the thunder of his arafatas but we hear also through successive ages that shabby choruysh of unkalified muzzlenimiissilehims that would blackguardise the whitestone ever hurtleturtled out of heaven.

His voice had the deep burr of a man who kept fishhooks in his beard. So I put on my muslin jumpsuit, slid sleeves and levers tight, pulled my hair shut with Sirian beeswax and en-route superterranean to Toucan Bay via Antimatic Congo Pump I met Cain waiting with the contraband: 8 grams of uncut Ceboletta X. And while Cain stroked a reefer the size of Mozambique rolled in a popadom, I held my head wide open for the suck with a nasal>oral siphon and was so oiled and eager for Joe Sam’s return to Houdini’s’ that night that I sped there, down near the jetty where fishgutfunk fumed furiously and found copious peoples rubbing belly to back, hacking heels.

The greatest thing by far is to be a master of metaphor. It is one thing that cannot be learned from others. It is a sign or genius, such a good metaphor implies an eye an eye for resemblance. 56

Listening for the syllables must be so constant and so scrupulous for from the root out, from all over the place, the syllable comes, the figures of, the dance.51

(1) the kinetics of the thing. A poem is energy transferred from where the poet got it [...] by way of the poem itself, all the way over to, the reader. Then the poem itself must, at all points, be a high-energy construct, and at all points an energy-discharge.52

    a cognitive of dual
A different type of metaphor is introduced. Traditionally, metaphor is viewed as variation in the use of words, i.e. variation in meaning: "a word is said to be used with a transferred meaning" (Halliday 1985: 321). In this sense, a lexeme with a certain literal meaning can have metaphorical, transferred uses of meanings. In terms of these general types of perspectives [...] this is a view from below, taking words as a starting point, and then saying something about the meanings these words realize.

This view can be complemented by a perspective 'from above', as Halliday shows. Here, the starting point is a particular meaning and the relevant question is: which are the different ways in which this meaning can be expressed as "variation in the expression of meanings".

Voice! That too, is launching forth effusion without return. Exclamation, cry, breathlessness, yell, cough, vomit, music. Voice leaves. Voice loses. She leaves. She loses. And that is how she writes, as one that throws a voice-forward, into the void. She goes away, she goes forward, doesn’t turn back to look at her tracks. Pays no attention to herself. Running breakneck. Contrary to the self-absorbed, masculine narcissism, making sure of its image, of being seen, of seeing itself, of assembling glories, of pocketing itself again.

There are many ways to read the role of the hyphen; however, all those who think critically about this punctuation mark agree that the hyphen performs—it is never neutral or natural. Indeed, by performing the mid-point between often conflicting categories, hyphens occupy "impossible" positions. Hyphens may link or divide, move away from things or toward them; but they always act. [...] The hyphen can be used as a transitive verb that suggests the term's tendency to connote travel.

Baraka's valorization of the verb recalls a similar move on her part thirty years earlier, her discussion of "verbal nouns" as one of black America's contributions to American English. She emphasises action, dynamism, and kinetics, arguing that black vernacular culture does the same: "Frequently the Negro, even with detached words in his vocabulary — not evolved in him but transplanted on his tongue by contact — must add action to it to make it do. So we have 'chop-axe', 'sitting-chair', 'cook-pot and the like because the speaker has in his mind the picture of the object in use. Action". She goes on to list a number of "verbal-nouns," verbs masquerading as nouns. Funeralize, I wouldn't friend with her, and uglifying away are among her examples of the former, won't stand a broke and She won't take a listen among the latter.

breathe-verb of infinitive position
Postulating the existence of a relation, verbs dominate the enunciation, whereas substantives, the becoming-explicit of terms, govern the utterance. What corresponds most precisely to the structuring that founds the discourse is the verb in the infinitive, not that it designates the act of enunciation but rather that it functions in the space of enunciation itself. Devoid of any mark of person or number, the verb in the infinitive expresses only the establishment of relationship, the existence of compatibilities. It implies neither subject nor object.

The language of orientation in general, such as conjunctions and adverbs (which connect one idea to the next, link events in space and time, and unite the speaker to his surroundings) proliferates in the English and not in the Welsh.

We could turn this argument around and see the "lack" from the Welsh perspective: What is lacking in the English is a "discrete" mode of poetry that imposes an obvious pattern of disruption, repetition, and condensation on Welsh expression. What is lacking in Old English is an intricacy of poetic requirement and a play of sounds that is absolutely required in Welsh poems.

"Sprung rhythm... less to be read than heard" that would, for all the "queerness" it might seem to have, be "nearest to the rhythm of prose, that is the native and natural language of speech, the least forced, the most rhetorical and emphatic of all possible rhythms." In the terminology he made for it, "sprung rhythm" is the praxis of an "instress" & instress is the force that brings & binds to language that defining pattern of a thing or person, the deep identity, that he called "inscape". 68

The song of Andoumboulou is one of burial and rebirth, mu momentary utterance extended into ongoing myth, an impulse toward signature, self-elaboration, finding and losing itself. The word for this is ythm (clipped rhythm, anagrammatic myth). Revisitation suggests that what was and, by extension, what is might be otherwise. "By myth. " Olson quotes Harrison quoting Aristotle, "I mean the arrangement of the incidents" --this in advancing a sense of alternative, "a special view of history".73

One can make out pretty surely that the Welsh refused to write intelligible poetry. ... The difficulty is something like that of the Icelandic court poetry. But the Icelander always has a clear idea: he knows the fact before he starts coating it with professional epithets. In Old Welsh poetry, there is apparently vagueness of thought as well as ingenuity of words to get over.75

What is being transmitted is the theme of the song, its imagery, its poetics. A verbatim text is not being transmitted, but instead an organised set of rules or constraints set by the piece and its traditions. In literary terms, this claim makes the structure of the genre central to the production of the piece. In psychological terms, the claim is an argument for schemas that involve imagery and poetics as well as meaning... Visual imagery is perhaps the most widespread faction in mnemonic systems. 81

"The idea is to use the voice “in a new, exceptional and unaccustomed fashion; to reveal its possibilities for producing physical shock; to divide and distribute it actually in space; to deal with intonation* in an absolutely concrete manner, restoring the power to shatter as well as to really manifest something; to turn against language as its basely utilitarian, one could say alimentary sources, against its trapped breast origins” (TD46). A theatricalised voice is one that induces fear. 82
